The Revised Technology Adoption Life Cycle

“The challenge is to stay a step ahead of user needs while remembering that each new route to access doesn’t replace the old ones.”

Carol Tenopir, LJ April 1, 2006

Web 2.0

- Internet as we knew it for ~10 years:

- Hyperlinking
- Email, ftp
- Answer any question (almost)

+

- Interactivity between content creators & audience

- Blogs, wikis
 - Communication

Library 2.0

- Current library technology (maybe)
 - Blogs, wikis, chat reference
 - New ideas?
 - Open access to OPAC
 - Provide access to resources via PDAs
 - Library mash-ups
 - Visual display of search results
 - Enable peer-to-peer promotion

Stephen Abram's 2.0 Questions

1. How static is our web presence?
2. How much “interactivity” do we have with our users and the community at large?
3. How much non-text do we have in our web presence?
4. Any 2.0 tools we should play, experiment, or pilot with?
5. What's our real role in the greater social context?

Mash-ups – Denver Libraries

The screenshot shows the Denver Public Library Online website. At the top left is the logo for denverlibrary.org with the tagline "Denver Public Library Online". On the top right is a "DPL Toolbar" with a search bar, a "GO" button, and a "powered by Google" logo. Below the search bar is a "Library Catalog" dropdown menu. To the right of the search bar is a red button that says "Ask Colorado 24/7 Librarian".

The main content area is titled "Locations & Hours" and includes a "Home > Locations & Hours" breadcrumb. Below the title are three links: "List of Branches and Hours", "Bookmobile Schedule", and "Library Holidays & Closures". A prominent announcement reads: "New hours at every location beginning January 3, 2006". Below this, it says: "Choose a branch location on the map or select from the text links to find more information about that branch or area." and "Temporary Closure of Westwood Branch Library".

The central feature is a map of Denver and surrounding areas, including Arvada, Aurora, and Glendale. The map is overlaid with numerous red location pins. Above the map are three tabs: "Map", "Satellite", and "Hybrid". To the left of the map are navigation controls including a compass, a zoom slider, and directional arrows.

On the right side of the map, there is a "Locations" list with the following entries: Central Library, Athmar Park, Bear Valley, Blair-Caldwell, Byers, Decker, Eugene Field, Ford-Warren, Hadley, Hampden, Montbello, Park Hill, Pauline Robinson, Ross-Barnum, Ross-Broadway, Ross-Cherry Creek, Ross-University Hills, Schlessman Family, Smiley, Valdez-Perry, Virginia Village, Woodbury, and Bookmobile.

On the left side of the page, there is a vertical navigation menu with various categories, each with a right-pointing arrow: "Library Catalog", "Library Card", "Ask a Question", "Research Resources", "Books, Movies, Music", "DPL Downloads", "Locations & Hours", "News & Events", "About the Library", "Leisure, Life & Family", "Western History & Genealogy", and "African American Research Library". Below these are three colored buttons: a green "Kids" button, an orange "Teens" button, and a red "Español" button.

IMLS findings on The Status of Technolgy and Digitization in the Nation's Museums and Libraries

A January 2006 report from IMLS on "The Status of Technolgy and Digitization in the Nation's Museums and Libraries" is very good.

Here are the Key Findings from the IMLS website. I hope that it intrigues you enough to read the full report. They also have specific findings for all types of libraries.

TECHNOLOGY USE

Small museums and public libraries have made dramatic progress, although they still lag behind their larger counterparts.

The extent of implementation and use of technologies in museums, public libraries, academic libraries, and all state library administrative agencies increased from the 2001 survey to the one conducted in 2004. The most dramatic increases are in small museums and public libraries, more of which have implemented basic office technologies and Web sites. Archives, which were not surveyed in 2001, report high percentages of basic and some advanced technologies in use.

The use of essential office technologies (e-mail, office productivity software, and desktop computers) is pervasive among state library administrative agencies, large archives, museums, public libraries, and academic libraries. Small museums and public libraries have expanded their use of basic technologies since the 2001 survey, but still lag behind the larger institutions.

Internet connectivity is pervasive among all groups, with broadband connections predominant over modem connections, except among smaller institutions. Institutional Web sites are prevalent among institutions in all groups. Use of institutional Web sites has increased in small museums and public libraries since the 2001 survey, but these institutions still lag behind medium and large institutions. Libraries and museums are putting services and activities online to manage their institutions and provide enhanced public service.

Newer technologies that use Internet-based and other kinds of online services and activities are being widely implemented among all groups.

New technologies include broadband Internet connections, which are easing out modem Internet connections; online catalogs of collections and holdings; local area networks (LANs); intranets; wireless

Teen Videos on YouTube: What can we learn?

Social community web sites such as YouTube allow teens to share their digital creations with one another. YouTube is largely dominated by short films, photographic video, and diary-style media that members create, upload, and share with one another. After viewing homemade films by teenagers on the YouTube web site, I noticed some different approaches that youth utilize when making their films.

"Spur of the Moment" video footage seems to be the theme for the majority of teen-created films on YouTube. Within these films, the footage is not scripted, but rather photographic, serving as a record of time. An example of this is Kyle Gone Crazyed, a film where the videographer spontaneously captures a moment within the school library as he badgers his friends with on-the-fly humor. This type of film is appealing because it captures the "spirit" of the moment. They often seem like inside jokes between the person filming the event, and the person being filmed.

About This Blog
 This Blog is updated by two librarians who work with teens. It includes viewpoints about serving teens, as well as day-to-day commentary on what the librarians are learning and experiencing.

Feel-good Librarian

Why we do this.

The Right Question

I was on desk with Quiet and Classy librarian yesterday. She is always dressed elegantly and speaks quietly and kindly. We were quite busy, running out from behind the desk to the shelves, to the computers, back to the phone and the IM requests.

On one of my trips back, I asked a tall older lady standing at the desk in a mink coat, jeans and sneakers if I could help her. She was looking at one of our city maps.

"I'm so flustered right now, I can't tell you," she said. "I'm looking for my eye doctor's office, and I can't think of what road it's on. You go north on the highway, then turn left and wind around and it's back in there."

Hm. "Well, just take a moment and calm down," I said. "We have lots of time. Is it Busy Street, by chance?"

"Busy Street....no, no, I don't think so," she mumbled.

"Well, take your time. If I can help you, I'll be right here." I pointed to the desk and she nodded, poring over the map.

The poor lady was there for over an hour, trying to figure out where she was going. I checked in with her from time to time, as did Quiet and Classy. She finally got that it was a dentist's office she was looking for, not an eye doctor.

The Simpsons on the Big Screen

Could this be some cruel April Fools joke?

According to news reports, the most beloved American family made their debut on the big screen this past weekend, announcing a new Simpsons movie in the works. A short leaser trailer featuring Homer Simpson in his tighty whities was shown before the new animated film, Ice Age: The Meltdown. The release date is July 27, 2007 so mark your calendars!

The library has a ton of materials on the Simpsons, including DVD sets of the first, second, third, fourth, fifth, and sixth seasons of the popular television show. For those of you who want to read about the Simpsons, there are books discussing the social relevance and philosophy of the Simpsons.

The Derek Trucks Band: Songlines

CML call number: CD/ROCK/Trucks

Ben Ratliff wrote in the New York Times: "It is a delicious pleasure to hear Derek Trucks play the guitar on 'Songlines.' You can just sit agog at his natural abilities. It's even sweeter to hear a 26-year-old guitar hero who isn't cold and mechanical. Somehow his nervous system has absorbed older, earthier models of jazz swing and the blues cry. Influenced principally by John Coltrane, Ali Akbar Khan and Duane Allman -- whose songs he performs during his duties as a member of the Allman Brothers Band -- Mr. Trucks uses a slide on his fretting hand and picks the strings with his fingers. Like most slide guitarists, he's aiming for a voicelike expression. ... [I]n 'Sahib Teri Bandi,' a nearly 10-minute qawwali piece from Nusrat Fateh Ali Khan's repertory, ... Mr. Trucks's improvisation is beguiling: somehow he has reached a natural balance between Southern gospel expression and the emotionally piercing vocabulary of qawwali music. ... 'Songlines,' Mr. Trucks's first new studio album with his band in nearly four years, improves on the five that preceded it. There's more texture, more layers of sound ..." ("Critics' Choice: New CD's," 2/20/06).

THE DAILY NIGHTLY

ABOUT THIS BLOG

The Daily Nightly began on May 31, 2005. As Brian wrote in his first post it aims to provide a narrative of the broadcast day and a window into the editorial process at NBC Nightly News. Regular contributors include Brian and NBC News correspondents around the world, as well as producers and staff from the Broadcast Standards department.

Brian Williams became the seventh anchor and managing editor in the history of NBC Nightly News on December 2, 2004. Read his full biography.

TONIGHT ON NIGHTLY NEWS

On this Earth Day, the country is once again focused on the price of gasoline. President Bush is in California pushing alternative sources of fuel while Americans are watching the price of gas climb higher. Overnight, the average price of gasoline rose 3 cents and in many parts of the country it is well over $3 a gallon. Kelly O'Donnell is with the president following that story.

While it is not yet guaranteed, and certainly there have been last minute changes, political party representatives in Iraq tell us it looks very likely that Jawad al Maliki will be Iraq's next prime minister.

Here's a thumbnail analysis:

Grey's Anatomy Writers

GREY MATTER: FROM THE WRITERS OF GREY'S ANATOMY

From Blythe Robe, writer of "Name of the Game"

Typical. Leave it to life to know just when you've sworn off the game. Just when you've decided to be alone, have your Mary Tyler Moore phase and "make it on your own," made your vow of celibacy, then -- POOF! -- out of no where comes a sexy veterinarian with a whole "ooh look at me I'm saving your dog's life, and I also routinely saves the lives of innocent puppies and ponies and am no doubt a good person and clearly irresistible!" thing. It's like the universe can smell the fact that you are completely content about flying solo and decides to throw a big old sexy distraction your way in some sort of twisted joke, and you, of course, are powerless because, well it's the universe, and it's a guy, and so you have no choice but to play yet again. Just typical.

Having gotten that off my chest I would also just like to say... Well, hello Chris O'Donnell! If anyone's going to pull Meredith out of the McD rut, he just might be up for the challenge. But, I suppose we're just gonna have to wait and see about that...damnit!

So, tonight's theme was "the games we play." The reason I love this theme so much is because games are so much a part of this show. It goes all the way back to the very beginning when Shonda introduced their interplay as "the game." The competition, striving

"Dimensionalizing the paradigm" and other marketing speak

When I was with Apple, I worked in marcom (Marketing Communications). This is where I first learned to speak like a real marketing genius. For example, I learned to use the term "best practice" instead of the more common place "effective," "efficient" or..."good." In the old days we'd say something like "Let's identify what works and what doesn't." Or perhaps "What sucks and what kicks butt." But then I attended my first meeting to "identify best practices." I'm still not sure what it means, but I've been able to survive for the past few years in business without ever having to use the phrase again. And I hope that neither you or I ever have to see the phrase in a PowerPoint slide.

And speaking of marketing hubris (I mean genius), did you ever see this great video by Aquent. Before the Microsoft parody of marketing communications and

The main page of LII offers a rotating selection of featured sites, often reflecting current events and observations. Many of our featured sites at present are about the centennial of the 1906 Earthquake and Fire. A fresh site appears every hour. (Note: we're still compiling our survey input about the budget cut--we should have a summary next week.)

A few tips to get you started:

- Please register first if you haven't already. ☞ It's quick and easy.
- Most information in a Wiki is found via the search. For example, try to search for the word, 'password' (without quotes).
- Once you've found a document, if you see that it is missing information or has an error, you can edit it (as long as your logged in). Keep in mind that the Wiki doesn't have to use HTML. You can type things free form, or use the Guide to Markup Text to format.

Edit Albany (wiki) Playground

! Welcome to the Albany Playground Wiki!

!! Edit this page, create new pages, learn how to use a wiki ...

!! From PBWiki ...

- * What can you do with a wiki? [<http://tour.pbwiki.com/>|Take a tour] and [<http://templates.pbwiki.com/>] use pre-made templates]
- * How do you create a new page? [2 easy ways]
- * Learn how to use bold, italics, tables, and more: [WikiStyle|The wiki style page]
- * Share this wiki with others. [<http://albanyplayground.pbwiki.com/share.php>|It's easy]

At the bottom of the editing area are buttons for "Save", "Preview", and "Cancel". On the right side of the interface, there are navigation links: "Pages show all" with a sub-link "▪ FrontPage", "Images add images", "Files add files", and "Style Help Upload Files".
